INSPIRATIONAL DERBYSHIRE TEENAGER WINS COMMUNICATION AWARD

Aidan Baker, aged 18 from Derbyshire is celebrating after being crowned Young Person of the Year at the 2013/2014 Shine a Light Awards for the difference he has made to the lives of children and young people with speech, language and communication needs (SLCN).

The Awards, held in London on Thursday 3rd April and hosted by Broadcaster and Health Campaigner, Anne Diamond, are run by Pearson Assessment in partnership with The Communication Trust to honour individuals, teams, campaigns, communication friendly settings and communities that have excelled in their support of children and young people's communication.

Aidan, who attends I CAN's Dawn House School for children and young people aged 5-19 with a severe or complex communication difficulty in Nottinghamshire, inspired judges for his work writing and delivering training to others about SLCN, despite previously struggling to communicate with others.

Judges were impressed with Aidan's journey from an individual who struggled to keep calm in his interactions with others to one that now acts as a source of support and inspiration for other students in his school. Aidan has been a student governor, an active member of the school rock band as the lead vocalist and a keen participant in the school's mentoring programme.

Aidan has played a key role in the Raising Your Game project, led by Mencap in partnership with I CAN and Nacro, for young people aged between 14 and 25 with a learning disability or communication difficulty, who have been in trouble with the police or are at risk of getting into trouble.

As part of this, Aidan starred in a short film to demonstrate the impact of SLCN on young people and the talents they possess giving him the chance to showcase his competition standard wrestling skills.

Aidan Baker said: "It was such an amazing feeling to actually receive the Young Person of the Year Award. I feel more inspired to help a lot more people outside and in the community. It is important to learn, live and overcome difficulties and meet challenges along the way."

Jack Fradgley, aged 19 who won the Young Person of the Year Award in 2012, said: "Aidan is a worthy winner and serves as a testament to the great things you can achieve through determination and hard work.

“His work in numerous projects has been fantastic for raising awareness of SLCN and helping others. It was a great pleasure to be asked to help judge this award, especially as I was so surprised to receive it in 2012/13. The attributes and achievements of all of the shortlisted applicants were astonishing.”

Chris Hall, Managing Director of Pearson Assessment and Shine a Light Award Judge, says: “It gives me great pleasure to congratulate Aidan for winning this award. Aidan is an incredible role model who has overcome obstacles and shown tremendous resiliency. His journey from a young boy who couldn’t talk to becoming a trainer for others about SLCN deserves to be celebrated.

“We have been blown away by this year’s nominations and seen some truly inspiring examples of work being carried out to support children and young people with SLCN. With the awards now in their third year, we are excited to have helped over 90 individuals and teams shout about their work and go on to inspire others.”
