OUTSTANDING BILLINGHURST SPECIAL SCHOOL HONOURED AT SHINE A LIGHT AWARDS FOR ITS COMMITMENT TO DEVELOPING CHILDREN'S COMMUNICATION

Ingfield Manor School in Billinghamurst has been awarded the Augmentative and Alternative Communication (AAC) Award at an awards ceremony in London for its continued commitment to developing its pupils' communication skills. The 2017 Shine a Light Awards, run by Pearson in partnership with The Communication Trust, took place on 23rd March 2017 and were hosted by singer and theatre star Gareth Gates.

The 2017 Shine a Light Awards is a national awards scheme that celebrates innovative work and excellent practice in supporting children and young people's communication development. AAC is the term used to describe various methods that can be used to help people communicate from simple picture charts to more sophisticated computer technology.

Recognising that their AAC-user students were often missing the opportunity to learn the vocabulary available to them to support their communication and learning, the communication team at Ingfield Manor School decided AAC needed to be recognised as a subject in its own right and an accredited City and Guilds 'Effective AAC' qualification was launched.

The school's initiative to introduce AAC as a curriculum could not have gone better. Within two years speaking and listening levels rose from 29% of AAC users making expected or better than expected progress to 100%. This was reflected in the City and Guilds Effective AAC qualification, with 100% of students achieving their awards, matching formal qualifications achieved by their verbal peers.

Hazel Darby, Principal of the school said: "This is a tremendous achievement. We are proud to have the excellent work of staff and students recognised in the way. Very well done to all involved!"

Gareth Gates, host of the 2017 Shine a Light Awards, said: "The dedication of Ingfield Manor School is outstanding. Being able to communicate with confidence is often taken for granted but for many it is an everyday struggle. I have found my stutter crippling at times but I have learnt ways to manage my difficulties with the support of others.

"It is heart-warming to know that other children and young people across England are getting the support they need to develop and achieve goals that may not have been possible otherwise. Ingfield Manor School should be extremely proud of its award."

The new AAC qualification was introduced alongside the school's AAC lessons, enabling students to measure their own success and achievement. Informal 'chat' sessions are also timetabled for non-verbal students to give them opportunities to initiate conversations outside of the curriculum.

The school also provides the opportunity for families and carers to attend the AAC lessons and/or take part in one-to-one training sessions, with the school's AAC team running clinics to assess specialist equipment and seating, the results of which are fed directly in to the classroom setting.

For staff, regular whole-school training provides ongoing AAC support, with teaching assistants and support staff having direct contact with their speech and language therapist to understand their pupils' needs.

Chris Hall, Director of Clinical Assessment at Pearson, said: "Congratulations to Ingfield Manor School for its Augmentative and Alternative Communication (AAC) Award achievement. Their commitment to making AAC part of their curriculum, giving its pupils the opportunity to achieve a qualification is commendable.

"This is the fifth year we have run the Awards and we remain blown away by the standard of applications. They give an amazing insight into the unsung work that is taking place across the country to improve the speech, language and communication skills of children and young people."

Octavia Holland, Director of The Communication Trust, said: "Congratulations to Ingfield Manor School and everyone who triumphed at the Shine a Light Awards. They have shown what can be achieved when expertise, enthusiasm and dedication is given to children and young people who struggle to communicate. These Awards highlight the very best practice that is taking place in settings across the country. We would like to say a huge thank you to Pearson for their long-standing support."

Ingfield is part of the national charity Scope, which exists to make this country a place where disabled people have the same opportunities as everyone else.
